

State Grid Weibo criticizes netizens

The advertisement features a central image of a Solar Pro battery storage system, consisting of a stack of six white battery units on a metal frame with wheels. To the left of the batteries is a background image of a house with solar panels on its roof. To the right of the batteries are four circular icons: a hand pointing to a button, a globe, a battery with a lightning bolt, and a bell with a lightning bolt. Below these icons are four lines of text: 'easy to install and use', 'World wide Products', 'faster charging and discharging', and 'Multiple protection with alarm systems'. At the bottom right, there is a large heading 'Can save energy' followed by two paragraphs of text: 'the battery capacity can be increased freely and flexibly according to the situation of home use.' and 'Rechargeable lithium batteries use safe LiFePO4'.

This study presents evidence that Weibo users criticise public figures through indirect discursive strategies, including parody of name, constructed dialogues and rhetorical questions. After inspection by after-sales professionals, Tesla said that the preliminary judgment was that it was a current problem (that is, it was related to the current of the national power grid), and the solution given was: only damaged parts could be replaced free of charge, and the car could not be. An apology from Tesla's Weibo was searched hotly by "Xiao", causing heated discussion among netizens! On February 1, Tesla posted on its official Weibo "Tesla Customer Support", "Regarding the abnormal situation of Nanchang car owners recently after charging, it is preliminary judged that the fault. This study explores netizens' discursive practice by focusing the analysis on netizens' language use in context per se, rather than from a censorship/counter-censorship viewpoint. It adopts a discursive pragmatic approach to examine a 'mundane' trending topic regarding a dispute between two public. China is an important market for Tesla, with sales topping 120,000 units last year. Some argue that these regimes deliberately tolerate somewhat critical online comments as a way to monitor mass sentiments.
